Tips for a Safer, Smarter Home

Electricity powers so much of our daily lives, but it's important to remember that mishandling it can lead to serious risks, including injuries and property damage. Staying aware and practicing good electrical safety habits helps protect your home and everyone in it.

To the right are five simple tips to keep your home electrically safe all year long.

Staying on top of electrical safety is all about protecting your loved ones and making your home a safer place. Let's make it a priority all year long.

STAY ALERT

Check your home's electrical system regularly. Look for signs of wear, like frayed wires or cords, and swap them out if you find any. Overloading extension cords can be dangerous, so add more outlets!

USE SURGE PROTECTORS

Protect your electronics from those pesky voltage spikes using surge protectors. Make sure they're doing their job and replace them if they seem damaged or old.

KEEP WATER AWAY

Water and electricity don't mix, so keep appliances away from wet areas. If you have damp spaces, consider installing Ground Fault Circuit Interrupters (GFCIs) for an extra layer of safety.

POWER STRIP SMARTS

When using power strips, remember not to overload them! Spread your high-energy devices across different outlets to keep everything cool and safe from overheating.

TALK ABOUT SAFETY

Have open conversations about electrical safety with everyone in the family, especially the kids! It's also a great idea to create and practice a home fire escape plan that includes what to do in case of electrical emergencies.
